

About the Contributors

Eduardo C. Tadem is a professor of Asian Studies at the University of the Philippines, Diliman. He holds a Ph.D in Southeast Asian Studies from the National University of Singapore. He has researched and published extensively on agrarian reform and social movements, foreign aid, Philippine-Japan relations, conflicts over natural resources, international labor migration, foreign investments, and contemporary politics. His most recent publications are: "Reconstructing Peasant Lives in Central Luzon: The View from Below," Social Science Diliman, 4 (1 & 2) (January-December 2007); and "Marxism, the Peasantry and Agrarian Revolution in the Philippines," in Marxism in the Philippines: Part Three, Anvil Publications and Third World Studies Center, UP (2008) (forthcoming). Email: edtadem@zpdee.net

Pak Nung Wong is a research assistant professor at the Hongkong Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies, Chinese University of Hongkong. He obtained a D. Phil. in social and cultural anthropology from St. Antony's College (Oxford). His doctoral dissertation, entitled "Technologies of the Strong: State-Building in a Northeastern Philippine Frontier," accounted for the histories of governance and state-building in Tuguegarao City and Tuao, Cagayan Valley. His two most recent journal articles include: "Outline of an Anthropology of the Modern Philippine State: Political Decentralization, Internal Pacification, and the Strongmen as State-Builders," in Journal of Comparative Asian Development (2006); and "Toward a More Comprehensive Analysis of Warlord Politics: Constitutive Agency, Patron-Client Networks, and Robust Action", in Asian Journal of Political Science (2008). Email: pnwong@cuhk.edu.hk

Masataka KIMURA is a professor at the College of Humanities, Ibaraki University, Japan. His research interests cover international relations and Southeast Asia with an emphasis on the Philippines. His most recent publications in English include "The Federation of Free Farmers and Its Significance in the History of the Philippine Peasant Movement," Southeast Asian Studies, 44 (1) (June 2006); and "The Emergence of the Middle Classes and Political change in the Philippines," The Developing Economies, XLI (2) (June 2003). Email: kmr@mx.ibaraki.ac.jp

Verna Dinah Q. Viajar is an assistant professor at the Department of Political Science, University of the Philippines-Diliman. She acquired her M.A. in Labor Policies and Globalization at the University of Kassel and Berlin School of Economics, Germany. She is co-author of Philippine Civil Society and the Globalization Discourse (2004) and chapter author of "Philippine Trade Unions in the Era of Globalization: Focus on Cement and Garment Workers" in Philippine Social Movements (2006). She is currently doing research on "Assessing the Implications of the GATS Agreement in the Philippines" and the "Philippine Trade Policy Process and Trade Negotiation Strategies". Email: verna.viajar@gmail.com