

OFFICIAL LIST OF REGULAR AND STUDENT PSS MEMBERS FOR 1972

AS OF JANUARY 21, 1973

Information is given in the following order: first line – name; second line – highest degree, major discipline and year when it was granted, and granting institution (a university unless otherwise specified); third line – present position and place of employment (a university unless otherwise specified). Where possible, abbreviations for academic degrees, disciplines, ranks, and positions follow those used in Current Anthropology 11 (3): 250 (June 1970).

the integration of the masses into the process of development. It is a strategy that would establish goals based, not on Western conceptions of modernity, but on the more immediate and basic needs of the people. It sees mass poverty as resulting not from "tradition" or the absence of "modern" skills and values among the people, but from colonial and elite exploitation. It views the elite-mass cleavage as involving relationships of exploitation and oppression apart from cultural differentiation.

In contrast to what we shall call "modernization strategy," which emphasizes stability, mobilization strategy is premised on the need for social revolution. It assumes that economic development cannot be achieved without the destruction of social and political structures which hinder the development of the masses as a force for development. One of the first targets of this strategy is foreign dominance in the post-independence economy. Where modernization strategy sees Western investment as a positive force in the process of development, mobilization strategy sees it as an obstacle and as a powerful prop of elite dominance.

The two strategies also differ in their conception of the role of political leadership in a developing society. For mobilization strategy, leadership is not based on managerial competence or educational qualification, but on the ability to raise the level of political consciousness of the people and to motivate and organize them for mass action. Hence the need to draw upon the peasant and working classes for leaders, not only for political parties, but also for government as well.

Note

This is the slightly revised version of a comment read March 23, 1972, in the public lecture series, "Social Issues '72," at the San Miguel Auditorium, Makati, Rizal, under the sponsorship of the Philippine Sociological Society, Inc. Prof. Rocamora is an assistant professor, department of political science, University of the Philippines. He is a candidate for the Ph.D. in political science, Cornell University.

FORTHCOMING IN PSR: a KINSHIP issue (January 1973)

Articles A. E. Evangelista on tuba drinking and kinship in Bulacan; J. A. N. Dizon on interaction with kinsmen among Metro Manila managers; W. F. Arce on choosing ritual kinsmen in Camarines Sur; F. J. Murray on local kin groups in Nueva Ecija

Research notes P. Flattery on Barlig, Bontok; F. Lynch on Filipino "clannishness" in Bulacan and Camarines Sur

Reviews: A. M. L. Coseteng, Spanish churches in the Philippines (reviewed by Dom Bernardo Perez); N. P. Cushner, Spain in the Philippines (reviewed by J. N. Schumacher, Hollnsteiner, G. J. Gil, and F. Lynch)
