

About the Contributors

Eric N. Budd has a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Chicago and is assistant professor at Fitchburg State College. He is completing a book manuscript on the impact of patrimonialism on economic development and democratization.

Renato Cruz De Castro is a faculty member of the Department of Political Science at De La Salle University. He is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Government and International Studies of the University of South Carolina. He has been published in Asian Perspective, Issues and Studies, Armed Forces and Society, and Contemporary Southeast Asia.

Leonora C. Angeles is assistant professor of planning and women's studies at the University of British Columbia and research fellow of the UBC Center for Human Settlements, Center for Research on Gender and Women's Studies, and Center for Southeast Asian Research. She is currently working on three research and capacity-building projects that link gender, governance and poverty issues.

Nathan Gilbert Quimpo served as assistant professor of political science and senior lecturer in sociology at the University of the Philippines. He plans on pursuing his doctoral studies soon at the School of Oriental and African Studies in London. A long-time political activist in the Philippines, he worked for a time with the revolutionary movement in Mindanao during the Marcos era.

Raymund Jose G. Quilop is assistant professor of political science at the University of the Philippines and a senior research fellow of the Office of Strategic and Special Studies of the Armed Forces of the Philippines. He recently finished a masteral thesis on ASEAN Multilateralism.