

CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

DAVID HANSON analyzes linguistic, sampling, and research situation equivalence in cross-cultural research in his article for this issue.

FRANCIS C. MADIGAN, S.J. is Director of the Research Institute for Mindanao Culture in Xavier University, Cagayan de Oro City. He has conducted a number of researches and is the author of the well-known The Farmer Said No.

GOTTFRIED OOSTERWAL holds a Ph.D. in religion and theology and a Litt.D. in Anthropology and Sociology. He studied history, anthropology and theology at the University of Utrecht, Holland, and Cambridge, England. He spent seven years as a missionary-anthropologist in West New Guinea. Presently he is connected with the Institute of World Mission of Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan.

FLORENCIO RIGUERA is with the Central Seminary of the University of Santo Tomas and has done research on Ilocano folk rites and beliefs.

DANIEL J. SCHEANS has been published previously in this Review. He is with the Department of Anthropology of Portland State College in Oregon.

PETER C. SMITH is currently enrolled as a doctoral student in the Department of Sociology, University of Chicago. He was on a Fulbright-Hays fellowship at the Population Institute, University of the Philippines, where he was the first graduate of the MA in Demography degree in 1966.

G. RICHARD TUCKER is a Ford Foundation Consultant of the Language Study Center of the Philippine Normal College. His published research includes studies in language acquisition and of judges' attitudes to speakers of various languages and dialects. He obtained his Ph.D. from McGill University.

HARI S. UPADHYAYA is connected with the Division of Social Sciences, Fort Valley State College in Georgia as Associate Professor.